

Lounge Area, Terminal Building,
Archerfield Airport, Brisbane
Friday 25 January 2019, 7:00 for 7:30pm

“The amazing World Wide Web and its meaning in life”

Or just the bit that matters to aviation historians and other weirdos!

by Ian McDonell

The internet is both the most used and most misused product in history. It is the single biggest source of knowledge ever assembled in man’s short history.

For the aviation historian and others interested in aviation related subjects it can provide a database of such a wide range of items that one person would never be able to access and use them all. For example do an internet search on Boeing 737 and see how many hits you get (76 million in far less than a second)

In this brief session I would like to show you a range of sources that I use to glean information for the research projects that I am working on. This is not by any means extensive nor as specialized as some other researchers (like our Uncle Bob and his work on B-24s).

